The Unspoken Cost of War...

Gender-based Violence During Conflict

Violence against women, and its deep seated physical and psychological affects, is ever present in our global society. Yet when the instability and insecurity of armed conflict strikes, violence against women is exacerbated. The impact of this doesn't end when the fighting is over – women are forced to live with reminders of their abuse on a daily basis.

With women playing a crucial role in conflict situations and peace-building initiatives, how do we safeguard them against violence and help them move on from the scars of their past? What role do men play in all this? And how do we eliminate the behaviours that enable and encourage violence in the first place?
